

LLAMAS SET TO BE THIS YEAR'S NEW VALENTINE'S CRAZE

A herd of native Peruvian animals, often known as the dolphins of the animal world, are currently teaming up with cupid and preparing to spice up the lives of six couples looking for love this Valentine's Day.

Llamas are being billed as a revolutionary way to spice up people's love lives. Trekking around Lake Derwentwater, in Keswick, Cumbria, may not be the typical romantic surprise associated with Valentine's Day, but <http://www.lakelandllamatreks.co.uk> say that once those who are in the mood for love have walked with the delightful creatures, romance will be a mere formality.

“During the walk, each couple will meander around the lake and woodland, alongside their four-legged companions, before nestling beneath the lakeland trees for a bottle of champagne and fresh strawberries picnic. The llamas will then lead the way to a lakeside cabin, where couples can snuggle up”

February 1, 2006.